

The Torrance Press-Herald of local color as the result of win the highest award for use statewide judging announced

Saturday at one of the final sessions of the California Newspaper Publishers Association's 80th annual convention.

Gene Roberts, display advertising manager for the Press-Herald, accepted the bronze plaque from Lt. Gov. Robert H. Finch, who presided over the traditional awards program.

"The award is a significant recognition of the Press-Herald ability to design and use color as a tool of our display and classified advertising departments," Co-Publisher Reid L. Bundy said. "To be singled out of all the non-daily newspapers in California for the recognition is a true honor," he said.

In recent years the Press-Herald has been cited in the statewide competition for its front page, editorial page, women's pages, and photography.

... Crossing

(Continued from Page A-1) as enlarging and or repairing existing signs, trimming any trees blocking the visibility of signs if on public property, and repainting the street—which was to be done today.

Parents charged that installation of a traffic signal at nearby 223rd Street and Normandie Avenue—scheduled a year from now—will not help. They claim it was too far from the crossing which is midway between 220th Street and 223rd Street. They do not want it relocated.

MOTHERS also protested the speed limit on Normandie—40 miles per hour—saying it was too fast and motorists without a stop from Sepulveda to Carson Street come through there sometimes in excess of 50 miles an hour.

Goss then said perhaps the street should be patrolled better.

Others brought up forming a human chain across the street to have the kids walk between but Moreno countered the proposal:

"If they ran over a crossing guard holding a stop sign what makes you think they'll stop for you?"

At the end of the heated discussion petitions were passed out to the mothers gathered on Mrs. Ferguson's front lawn—for persons to sign demanding action.

They will be presented to the Board of Education.

Members of city commissions whose terms expired in January or whose tenure was to be terminated because of absenteeism have been retained through June 30. The City Council extended the terms at their regular meeting last night.

Councilman Ross A. Sciarrotta Sr., chairman of a council sub committee studying the issue, said his group is still considering recommendations on the selection of commissioners. The subcommittee will have a detailed report prepared for next Tuesday's council meeting.

CITY MANAGER Edward J. Ferraro submitted his six-year capital improvement program to councilmen at last night's session.

The plan recommends specific uses for $620,000 left over from monies appropriated for the city's operating budget.

The 1967-68 program includes $475,500 in projects to be financed from local revenue. Ferraro stated in his recommendation that the program can be adopted without placing the city in "too tight a financial position."

The improvement recommendations were delayed for two main reasons:

- the potential need for all unappropriated funds to meet the urban renewal escrow crisis, and,

- the uncertainty of the status of certain state legislation concerning city revenues. Particularly important was the new state cigarette tax law. The city expects roughly $630,000 from the state in cigarette tax funds, depending on how the state chooses to distribute the tax among various cities.

The City Council will now review Ferraro's recommendations and take specific action at the end of the month.

IN FURTHER action, the council granted more time to its Police and Fire Committee to look into the question of a retirement plan for city police and firefighters. Committee Chairman Ken Miller said his group had only received the proposal Friday and objected to the idea of making a hasty decision.

Police and firemen want a plan which would allow them to retire at age 50 on half pay provided they had served for 20 years.

Councilmen seemed uncertain as to whether or not the measure should be submitted to the people for a vote.

Controversy over the construction of roadways through an undeveloped landsite flared at last night's City Council meeting. The property in question is located between Lomita Boulevard and 235th Street.

The city wants to extend either Garnier or Maple Avenue between the two thoroughfares.

Property owner Ray Watt objects to the city's plan for the extension of Garnier Avenue because it would force him to dedicate at least part of one lot.

The council decided to postpone the question until the final tract map comes up, provided Watt will not build on the land in the meantime.

The city wants to turn the project site into an airport-oriented light industrial park. RDA is currently accepting bids from wrecking companies to raze those buildings purchased by the agency.

Irwin said that RDA is already ahead of its schedule for buying up homes and businesses in the tract area. In addition to purchasing property, RDA helps to find new locations for the people involved.

So far, Irwin said, RDA has actually moved 12 families, two businesses, and one individual. The agency has purchased 130 of the 204 parcels within the project area.

Marijuana Probe Ends In Arrest

Narcotics officers from the Torrance Police Department arrested a Torrance youth Monday night, booking him on two counts of sale of marijuana. The arrest climaxed a month-long investigation.

Booked was 23-year-old Ronald D. Gull, Pleasant View Trailer Park, Space 46, Vermont Avenue at Carson Street.

Gull is a welder at Alex Steel Products, 22106 S. Vermont Ave.

Boy on Dope Turned In By Parents

Parents of a 19-year-old Torrance youth notified police Monday morning when they observed their son preparing a "fix."

Police subsequently arrested the boy for possession of dangerous drugs and instruments for injection, and for being under the influence of a dangerous drug.
